RED AWARDS 2023

Sartorial Spirit

Put your best foot forward with these American brands influencing the way we dress up.

WRITTEN AND PRODUCED BY SARAH SHELTON

Bold Type

Fashionistas take note: To make a memorable statement, put on a number by Autumn Adeigbo. Whether it be a fringed coat, floral mini dress, or blouse bedecked in a print inspired by the designer's Nigerian family roots, pattern, color and bold silhouettes define the Parsons grad's collections. The Black designer prioritizes sustainable practices, like made-to-order, and supporting female-owned production facilities throughout the U.S. autumnadeigbo.com

Boding Well

Bode founder Emily Adams Bode Aujla, who first entered the fashion scene in 2016 as a menswear designer, delighted legions of fans at this year's Paris Fashion Week with the debut of her first-ever women's collection. With an M.O. for antique textiles, appliqué, quilting and overall storytelling through garments, Bode captures a singular, nostalgic aesthetic that in-the-know dressers crave. For home dwellers, the brand also offers a special selection of textiles and furnishings that are equally as covetable. bode.com
